This talk will present background on the history of Indigenous land and the Superfund program for highly contaminated sites in the USA. It highlights work from the second edition of the Our Land, Our Stories book project and the environmental justice story of the Ramapough Lunaape Turtle Clan and the Ringwood Mines Superfund Site. It is not possible to understand the impacts of environmental pollution through scientific data alone. This land is not just a Superfund site; it is also home and a place of memory and connection.
