About this Guide

The Office of Sponsored Programs has prepared this guide in response to numerous requests from Teachers College students for more comprehensive information about external sources of funding for their studies.

The guide is organized into three basic sections. The first contains a list of funding opportunities that are available to all graduate students to support study in all (or most) disciplines. The second section is organized by department, and contains a list of funding opportunities that support graduate students in that particular area. The last section contains programs that provide minorities, women and disabled persons with funds to pursue graduate studies.

Each section is organized alphabetically by sponsor. Please keep in mind when using this guide that certain information, such as the name of the contact person, is subject to change without notice. It’s a good idea to check the sponsor’s web address before contacting them to make sure your information is current. Direct web addresses to program information may change as well. If a link doesn’t work, go to the sponsor’s home page and perform a search for the program you’re interested in from there.

Most of the programs listed here (with the exception of federal programs sponsored by the National Science Foundation and the National Institutes of Health) are awards that are made to you as an individual. Therefore, you are free to apply to any program for which you think you may qualify without consulting OSP. However, OSP will be able to assist students in the application process by directing students to where to find funding sources, how to prepare the paperwork required to submit to our office, what resources are available on the OSP website, as well as the grant sources themselves.

We will also be able to help register students to the on-line grant sites so they can prepare on-line applications for those sponsors that require it. This will also give them the ability to follow the progress of their applications and grant if they are awarded. Any TC student who would like additional assistance should contact Paul A. Kran, Director at Kran@tc.edu.

Other Resources

OSP has compiled this guide primarily as a resource for doctoral candidates seeking both financial aid and experience preparing competitive grant applications; however, it includes information of interest to master’s degree candidates as well. Most of the programs listed here make awards to students along similar lines as governmental student financial aid programs—that is, they award funds to an individual to pursue his or her studies at the institution of his or her choice.

The information in this guide was compiled from the Sponsored Program Information Network (SPIN), an online database that indexes funding opportunities in all areas from federal, state, local, private, and international sources. Certain types of funding for graduate students were omitted from this guide due to space concerns. These types include:

- Scholarships for students from geographical areas outside the NY tri-state area
- Scholarships that provide funding for study at a specific institution
- Programs that award prize money to a graduate student for a paper or other work

If you’re interested in this type of program, you are welcome to search SPIN yourself at http://www.infoed.org/new_spin/spinmain.asp. OSP recommends that graduate students choose “advanced search” and then choose “graduate student” under “applicant type” in order to insure the maximum number of relevant hits. Finally, graduate students should be aware that most external funding for graduate study at Teachers College does not come from programs such as the ones listed in this guide. Rather, that support derives from research grants awarded to faculty, who request funds to hire research assistants. The best way to find out about this type of funding is to ask faculty members with whom you’re interested in working. OSP also publishes a list of active, externally funded research projects on its website at www.tc.edu/osp.
