From the early days of the internet to the emergence of web 3.0, youth cultural production has been a key factor in driving the evolution of digital media, and piloting spaces where revolutionary ideas about collaboration, radical inclusion, and creativity have become a reality. In this talk, Devon Moore, Co-Creative Director of FELT Zine - an experimental internet collective will share insights on the transformative potential of youth culture spanning digital art parties, virtual worldbuilding and much more.

Devon Moore aka Dev Moore is a net artist, curator, creative technologist, and co-creative director of the FELT Zine collective. Dev's work incorporates technology, modern-day youth experiences, music culture, and more all while referencing components of tech culture.

FELT Zine is an internet art collective that creates digital and in-person experiences to examine digital activism, hip-hop culture, race, gender, and class. The internet art collective recently partnered with fashion power-house, Givenchy to create an NFT-enhanced fashion collection. In 2022, FELT Zine was included in the Dazed100 class of 2022 - "a generation of digital pioneers defining a new era of the internet and shaping the future of culture".
