The story we have read is called "Antigone". This story was about a lady named Antigone that had a brother named Polyneikes who did some very bad things to the city of Thebes. When he died the king Creon decided that he was not to have a proper burial and was left to rot in the sand. One day the body was buried by no one other than his sister Antigone which drives the story into all sorts of drama.

~~In my opinion the women in the story~~ Antigone did nothing wrong and is ~~way~~ more justified because she just properly buried her brother. Even if a family member committed a crime they should be buried like everyone else. There were no laws broken towards the Gods so the king Creon is wrong.

The laws that were made against the burial of Polyneikes were unjust because they were against the gods. "Yes, I dared. It was not Zeus who made them" pg.122. This Quote proves thesis because it shows that the laws were never made by the gods and it shows that no actual law was broken.

You should have the right to bury a family member no matter what past they had before they died. "And yet, to see my brother lie dead and unburied is an agony beyond words." Pg.122. This quote proves that it is wrong to leave someone unburied because you can see how a family member feels toward something as bad as that.

In the end Antigone shouldn't have died because she had a good future and she was just trying to show pride in her family." And glory than by giving the brother I love a decent proper burial?" .This means that she was just showing how much she loved her brother and she was saying that she was just trying to show pride in her family.

thesis should be in your intro.

needs
much more
analysis!

Antigone is more justified because she was just trying to show pride in her family because there is hardly anyone left in it. There were no laws broken and the whole problem just caused more deaths and in the end Creons son, wife and his soon to be daughter in law Antigone were all dead. The laws were against the Gods and had no real important purpose. My final words toward this story are that just because someone makes mistakes in their life doesn't mean that they should be disrespected when they die.
