Point Of View Response

What I think about Antigone is that she's hardcore and she doesn't care what anyone says she does what's right for her family. "Yes, I dared. It wasn't Zeus who made them. And justice dwelling in the underworld. Makes no such laws for men. Your edict, Kreon. For all its strength, is mortal and weak when measured. Against the laws of the gods, unwritten, unshakable, laws not meant for now, but for ever, for no man knows their age: laws that no proud point spirit of a man could make me break, for one day I must answer to the gods. I know that I will die. How could I not? Even without your edict. And yet, if I die now, before my time, how can that be a hardship? How can one live, as I do, surrounded by evil, and greet death as a friend? My death isn't important: and yet, to see my brother lie dead and unburied is an agony beyond words. But this is nothing. If you think me foolish, Kreon, me and my acts, perhaps I'm judged a fool by another fool." What I think Antigone is trying to say in that quote is he could do what ever he wants but he cant put her down. Also she's ready to die even though its not her time because she knows she did the right thing and the gods would accept it. "No! Justice doesn't allow this. You wanted no part, I gave you none." Now I think Antigone is trying to tell her sister Ismene to leave because when Antigone asked her if she wanted to help she said no. Now Antigone wants all the credit for what she did she doesn't want to share it.

This is a good start, but there's not enough of your own ideas in this.
